San Francisco State University
San Francisco, CA

The 2009 Pacific Conference for Development Economics is presented by the Bay Area Development Association in coordination with faculty from UC Davis, UC Berkeley, Stanford University, University of San Francisco, University of Southern California, UC San Diego, Saint Mary's College, Santa Clara University and San Francisco State University. The goal of the conference is to bring together graduate students, faculty and practitioners to present and discuss various issues facing developing economies today.

San Francisco State University is one of nation's largest urban public universities, located in the vibrant city of San Francisco. This year the conference is co-sponsored by the SF State College of Behavioral and Social Sciences, the Health Equity Initiative and SF State Department of Economics. The morning and afternoon sessions are separated by a luncheon with panel discussion by Professor Michael Kremer of Harvard University and Professor John Strauss of University of Southern California on "Is current Economics research adequately addressing health disparities in the developing world?" The panel discussion will be chaired by Professor Anil Deolalikar of University of California, Riverside.
